In a desperate attempt to prevent herbivores from destroying their crops, the poor farmers often set up illegal high-voltage electrical fences around their fields drawing power from electrical lines meant for home or agricultural use. Subsequently, tigers using human dominated landscape like agriculture fields to move about, are at a great risk when they encounter such fences.

India harbors 57% of the world's tiger population in 7% of their historic global range. At the same time, India has 1.25 billion people growing at a rate of 1.7% per year. Protected tiger habitats in India are geographically isolated and collectively hold this tiger population under tremendous anthropogenic pressure. These protected lands are in itself not enough to sustain the growing tiger population, intensifying human-tiger conflict as dispersing individuals enter human occupied areas. These factors— isolation and inadequate size of the protected lands harbouring tiger meta-populations, highlight the need to connect tiger habitats and the importance of corridors beyond protected lands. However, a great part of these corridors lies outside the protected area (PA) network and under different land ownership tenures. It is in such areas that the poor farmers often set up illegal high-voltage electrical fences around their fields drawing power from electrical lines meant for home or agricultural use. Subsequently, tigers using human dominated landscape like agriculture fields to move about, are at a great risk when they encounter such fences.

The objective of this report is to identify potential villages for effective mitigation and to raise awareness about the issue. Illegal electric fencing by farmers to protect their crops is non-selective in nature, wide spread and will have devastating effect on the long-term conservation of the tiger populations in India.

Tiger Tales – T 10

T10 was sired by T01 and Tigress T03 in the Umred-Karhandla Wildlife Sanctuary, Maharashtra.

T10 was radio collared on 18th March 2016 in the Umred-Karhandla Wildlife Sanctuary.

T10 moved out of his natal area and started dispersing in early July 2016.

T10 had a remarkable journey travelling a total distance of 2692.78 km which included crossing the Wainganga river and other linear barriers in the landscape and its territory extended over Pauni Territorial Forest and Nagbhid Range of Brahmapuri Forest Division.

On 19th April 2017, T10 was found electrocuted in a farm on receiving a mortality signal from his collar.

Introduction

Encroachment into forested areas and the practice of intensive human activities adjacent to forests have exposed global bio-diversity to a heightened realm of human-induced risks. Such risks not only represent in the form of habitat loss and fragmentation, and barriers to movement, but also leads to instances of mortality. Such mortalities result from criss-crossing linear infrastructure in forested areas like roads, railways and powerlines.

In a developing country like India, risk to wildlife from power lines takes on a different proportion. This mainly happens in the agricultural fields near forest areas where risk to wildlife from power lines transforms from being linear in nature to one which is all over the place (widespread and not merely linear). Farmers desperate to protect their crops from being raided by wild ungulates, who illegally put the fences around their crop fields, further facilitate this phenomenon. Consequently, the risk expands forming a 'landscape of current' around the protected areas, corridors and other potential wildlife habitats.

Due to extensive conservation efforts invested in our country, the tiger numbers in India has increased steadily. These growing populations spill over from the limited habitats and are exposed to human use areas. As any other territorial organism, humans too zealously guard the fringes of their territories. These fringe areas are mostly agricultural lands adjacent to forest areas. Humans put up fences, dig trenches and even electrically charge the barbed-wire fences to protect crops from wild ungulates and carnivores. Electrocuting instances are quite a common occurrence. The tiger bearing source populations in the Eastern Vidarbha Landscape have an annual turnover of 20%. Several tigers leave the safety of protected forests and move out into uncharted territories. No one knows their fate unless they are photo-captured in some other forest area after successful dispersal, or found dead or poached mid-way. Alarmingly, the collared tigers using human occupied landscapes have shown 80% mortality. This small but disquieting fact makes one wonder about the fate of unknown and uncollared tigers in the landscape that are dispersing in search of mates and territories.

The Landscape

The Eastern Vidarbha Landscape (EVL, Figure 1) or the Nagpur Division is one of six administrative divisions of Maharashtra State in India. Nagpur is the easternmost division in the state, with an administrative headquarters in the city of Nagpur. It lies between 18° 11' 20.69" N to 21° 43' 15.79" N and 78° 03' 37.09" E to 80° 54' 09.42" E. It encompasses an area of about 50,000 km² covering the six districts of Bhandara, Chandrapur, Gadchiroli, Gondia, Nagpur and Wardha. It houses a human population of 1,17,54,434 people, and at the same time has a forest cover of about 20,000 km². This patch of forest is very important as it harbours a population of about 150-200 tigers and forms the connecting link between the central and southern Indian tiger populations. It plays a pivotal role in exchange of individuals and thereby facilitates gene flow between these two populations increasing the viability of tiger populations in India. There are 8 protected areas or wildlife divisions where these tigers live, but these refuges are scattered like islands in a sea of human dominated landscape.

There are almost 8540 villages in this landscape and monitoring this landscape to check illegal use of electricity for electrocution purpose is almost impossible work. To deal with this problem we tried to prioritize villages based on their electrocution potential for the wildlife in this landscape. The prioritization methods are discussed in detail in Data and Methodology section of this report.

Data and Methodology

Land use data at 1:250,000 scale for the year 2012-13 was obtained from Bhuvan portal of National Remote Sensing Centre. This data was generated under the National Resource Census using Resourcesat-2 AWiFS satellite images. Vector data for village boundaries was obtained from the Survey of India. We used corridor layer that was modelled by Mondal et al 2016. Data on availability of electricity for agricultural use was obtained from District Census Hand Book for the state of Maharashtra from Census of India. This data was mapped to each village polygon and then mapped for entire EVL (Figure 2).

Since fringe areas of forests, adjoining to agricultural fields, are most vulnerable for wildlife with high chances of electrocution from electrified fences illegally installed by the farmers, it is important that we highlight the amount of such edges in the EVL. To do that we ran a polygon neighbour analysis between the areas with agricultural land use and forested areas in ArcGIS 10.

We calculated average landscape permeability for the movement of the tiger from the corridor layer into the village polygons. We also calculated average distance of each village polygon from protected areas (PA). Zonal statistics tool in ArcGIS 10 was used to do both these analysis. We then calculated the amount of forest cover in each village polygon using tabulate area tool in ArcGIS 10. Value of each of these variables that were extracted at the village level was standardized using Z-scored standardization technique. The electrocution potential of each village was then calculated using the following equation:

Habitat permeability – distance from PA + proportion of forest (i)

The following assumptions were made while forming equation (i):

- Higher the value of habitat permeability, higher is the chance of a tiger being present or moving there.
- Higher the distance of the village from Pas, lower is the chance that people will use electrified fences to protect their crops.
- Higher the proportion of forested area in a village polygon, higher is the chance that people will use electrified fences to protect their crops and higher chances of animal being electrocuted.

We defined this as the electrocution potential of the landscape. Higher the values more chances of animals being electrocuted. After calculating the values of electrocution potential for each village, we have classified them into 5 risk groups (Very Low, Low, Medium, High and Very High) using Jenks Natural Breaks Optimization following Jenks 1967.

Results

Land use/ land cover characteristics in Eastern Vidarbha Landscape

Table 1 indicates the various land use categories found in EVL. The major land uses are forest areas followed by agricultural land. Although built-up areas constitutes just 0.52% of the total geographical area, human population densities in these settlements can go up as high as 11,000 persons/ sq km.

Forest-agriculture edge in Eastern Vidarbha Landscape

EVL also present a high human-wildlife interface in the form of a 37,017.31 km long forest-agriculture edge (Table 2). If we assume that the chance that a farmer may use lethal electric fence to save his crops from wild ungulates, extends upto a distance of 500m from the forest edge, around 18,508.66 km² of land is under immediate risk of electrocution for wild animals in Eastern Vidarbha Landscape, Maharashtra India, but in reality the extent of this may be going much beyond 500 m from the forest edge.

Electrocution Potential of Eastern Vidarbha Landscape, Maharashtra, India

After calculating the village-wise electrocution potential using equation (i) we have presented the results in the form of district-wise maps giving location of protected areas, notified forest areas and corridors modelled by Mondal et al 2016. We have also provided a list of villages per district for the very high, high and medium risk categories along with map of the district. List of villages in Low and Very Low Electrocutation potential across the landscape is provided as Annexure (Annexure 1 – 6). The Landscape level electrocution potential map is shown in Figure 3.

DISTRICT BHANDARA

Bhandara has 873 villages for which the electrocution potential was calculated. It has 7 villages in the very high-risk category, 912 in high risk, 244 in medium, 445 in low and 86 in very low risk category (Table 3). Pauni and Sakoli tehsil has the highest number of high-risk villages with Pauni having 7 villages in the very high risk zone. Few villages in the Pauni tehsil in southern most tip of the Bhandara district adjoining the Umred Karhandla Wildlife Sanctuary has high potential for electrocution due to the presence of tigers and forested areas near villages and agricultural fields. The same is true for areas in the tehsils of Bhandara, Lakhani and Sakoli next to the Nawegaon-Nagzira Tiger Reserve. The List of villages in Very High, High and Medium electrocution potential given in Table 4 and the location of villages with respect to protected area and forest is shown in Figure 4.

DISTRICT WARDHA

Wardha has 1385 villages for which the electrocution potential was calculated. It has 2 villages in the very high-risk category, 32 in high-risk, 158 in medium, 491 in low and 702 in very low risk category (Table 13). Karanja and Seloo tehsil has the highest number of high-risk villages with Seloo having 2 villages in the very high-risk zone. In Wardha the very high and high-risk areas are situated near the Bor Tiger Reserve. The List of villages in Very High, High and Medium electrocution potential given in Table 14 and the location of villages with respect to protected area and forest is shown in Figure 9.

Recommendations

To curb death of tigers and other wildlife by electrocution, regular checking to search for illegal electric fences used for protection of crops and killing of wild animals across the landscape need to be carried on a regular basis. A joint team may be constituted with representatives from the concerned Electricity Department, Forest Department and PRIs for such monitoring. Special patrolling along the electric lines in buffer and corridor areas need to be carried at regular intervals. Reward system may be introduced for giving authentic/credible information regarding use of illegal power fences for crop protection and electrocution of wild animals. The point wise measures are detailed below:

Awareness and Patrolling

- Mass awareness program by Forest and Electricity Department in the landscape about the issues of electrocution and its consequences.
- Posters, banners highlighting the issues of electrocution across the landscape at strategic locations along with legal aspects of prosecution as per Wildlife Protection Act (1972) and Electricity Act (2003).
- Joint foot patrolling by frontline staff of Forest and Electricity Department during daytime and vehicle patrolling during night to detect illegal hooking from transmission line in the agricultural/farmlands along the fringe of the forest. Twice in week for very high-risk areas, once in high-risk areas and once in 15 days in medium risk areas as identified in this report.

Coordination and Information Gathering/Transfer

- DCF/DFO should coordinate monthly meetings between frontline staff of Electricity Department and Forest Department. In these meetings, review should be carried out on the tripping occasions, action taken on each instance and patrolling of transmission lines to prevent illegal hooking/transfer of electricity from live wires to farm fences, offence booked and followup actions.
- Regular phone calls and SMS updates from electricity department to respective forest officers under whose jurisdiction any tripping may have occurred.
- Electricity Department should share the records of tripping of power on weekly basis to the respective DCF/DFO.
- Regular informers are to be engaged by both the Forest and Electricity Department along the fringes of the forest to inform about the illegal use of electricity in these areas to kill wild animals or for crop protection.

Deterrants

- Temporary/permanent discontinuation of electricity should be used as a tool against owner/tenant/guard of the land where illegal hooking/electrification is practiced. Warning on first case and discontinuation for repeat offenders.
- Restricting agriculture line supply to limited hours of day when chances of wild animals being electrocuted are less.
- Advanced sensitive circuit breakers should be compulsorily used. Circuit breakers may be installed at regular intervals along the electric line to reduce fatalities due to electrocution and zeroing down location of electrocution.
- Joint patrolling by electricity and forest department staff, intensification of efforts during cropping season, information based patrolling, searching farms to check the possession of electric line hooking instruments.
- Offence booking under Wildlife Protection Act (1972) and Electricity Act (2003).

Long Term Measures:

- Separate power lines for agriculture and domestic power supply to be installed. Agriculture power supply only to be operational during daytime.
- Promotion of solar powered fencing around agricultural fields. Due care should be taken not to hamper the movement of the wildlife across the landscape.
- Option of permanent community fencing of low maintenance, stone-wall fencing, chain link fencing, vegetative fencing, etc should be tried.
- Developing and promoting crop insurance policies against crop damage/raiding.
- Regular crop and livestock damage compensation is an effective tool to reduce electrocution. However, wider publicity of the scheme, awareness creation, provision of helpline, assistance in compensation case preparation, simplicity/ease of dealing and prompt action from forest and revenue departments are further interventions required to be followed for better implementation of the scheme.
- Involving local communities to develop ecological interface with source populations, buffer, corridors, sink habitat, and not become barrier to gene flow. The prospect of local communities allowing their land to be used by wildlife for movement and having a stake in the wildlife resource as a part of their livelihood ensures that biodiversity values would remain high and large carnivores conserved in these human dominated landscapes.
